TOURIST INFORMATION

Town of Poreč is located on the western Istrian coast between Mirna river mouths on the north and Limski channel on the south. It has mild climate and coast with plenty of small islands and peninsulas, which are rich with pine trees. The town is protected from seaside by small island of Sveti Nikola. During pre-historically times it was settlement of Histri, from 178 BC it was controlled by Roman Empire, and from 35 BC it was important administrative and economic centre, called Colonia Julia Parentium. During the middle Ages it changes its masters (Celts, Goths, Aquilleian patriarchs, Byzantium, Slavs, Langobards, and Franks) and from 1267 Poreč is governed by Venice. The most important monument of culture was established by Byzantium cathedral of Assumption Mary, better known as Euphrasy's Basilica. It was built by bishop Euphrasy at the place of an older basilica under which Mauro's oratorio layers from 3rd to 4th century AD are located. Shiny mosaics decorating church interior and façade are among the most beautiful remains of Bezan art. UNESCO included in 1997 Euphrasy's basilica in list of World cultural and natural heritage.

Valamar Diamant Hotel 4* and Valamar Crystal Hotel 4* are located in a green oasis of the Brulo tourist community at 10-minute walking distance from the Poreč old town. Surrounded by high pine-trees and beautiful beaches, the hotels offer accommodation in hotel rooms and suites. Meeting rooms and congress hall with modern equipment, along with pleasant rooms and spacious suites provide ideal location for business meetings in peaceful ambience.

The Kažun Park. Kažun, one room, dry stone and mostly round structure is one of the Istrian specificities. Their greatest concentration is in the southern part of the Istrian peninsula. There are more than 3000 huts in the vicinity of Vodnjan, and some in the northern and eastern parts. Kažuni were traditionally used as shelters for farmers and shepherds in remote fields, and for storing tools. They were erected in the areas where the stone had to be removed to obtain fertile land. As a result, a lot of stone was left behind. It's interesting feature are its dimensions and a particular construction method, a so-called dry stone building, a simple placing of stones on top of each other with no mutual bond. To preserve this specificity, the Kažun Park was opened not far from Vodnjan, demonstrating the four stages of the kažun construction, from its foundations, walls and roofs to its final appearance. The Kažun Park is an outdoor museum exhibiting the Istrian tradition of building. An annual workshop has also been organized during which the visitors have partially erected a wall around the Kažun Park.

Gračičće. Only fifteen years ago it seemed that this old little town standing over the hilly landscape of central Istria had been ignored by modern changes. Life was thriving here already in prehistory and it is said that the name Gallignana was given to the town by the ancient Gauls more than two thousand years ago. A more active life was brought in by the Slavs, whose spiritual heritage can still be discerned in the name of the hill – Perunčevac, named after Perun, the highest Slavic god, but also in the thousand-year old worshipping of Svantovid, the origin, some people believe, of the Christian St. Vitus, Patron of the Parish of Gračičće. The most representative is, of course, the town centre – the Plac, with the church dedicated to the Mother of God, the chapel of St. Anthony and the Salomon Palace.
